II. Accreditation Process

- Accrediting body and characteristics
- Value to the programs and graduates
- Prior accreditation history
- Results
- Suggestions for improvement, response
Accrediting body and characteristics

• Formed in 1948 to develop and foster educational standards in schools of art and design; originally focused on new area of industrial design, later embraced all areas of the visual arts;

• National forum for the continuing review of these standards; annual conference for members to review and revise procedures and standards;

• Member institutions accountable for self-assessment (with criteria and guidelines set by NASAD) of the artistic and academic excellence of curriculums with more than 25% of content in design areas;

• Graduation from a NASAD accredited program is not a requirement for practice. This is different than Architecture, Landscape Architecture and Community and Regional Planning, among others, which require certification and/or registration in order to practice the discipline in most states. In those cases, graduation from an accredited professional program is a requirement for registration in most states.
Value to programs and graduates

• Benchmark our curriculums relative to national standards;

• Assessment tools developed and implemented;

• Means to quantify what are often qualitative outcomes;

• Participation across departments and programs enhances commonalities and distinctions.
Prior accreditation history

• Interior Design
  - Council for Interior Design Accreditation, CIDA (2012-15) (Required)

• Apparel, Merchandising, Design
  - American Apparel and Footwear Association (2011-16) (Required)
  - Accreditation Commission, Programs in Hospitality Administration (2008, Required)

• Biological/Pre-Medical Illustration
  - College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, mandated review for all cross-disciplinary programs (2007, Required)
Results

Current status:

- All degrees eligible received full accreditation for five years;

- Industrial Design (undergraduate and graduate) was not eligible at the time of the review because no students had graduated then, but was granted Plan Approval;

- The degree title Bachelor of Design and the content of the degree are innovations in the field and require further conversations regarding nomenclature. We are working with the NASAD Commission to address this issue.
Results

Next accreditation revue schedule:

• 2018-19 academic year. If successful, revues would take place at 10-year intervals.

• Annual submission of Higher Education Arts Data Surveys

• During year of review documentation presented per NASAD Handbook and guidelines; site visit by 3 – 5 members of a NASAD review team.
Suggestions for improvement, response

• NASAD identified these as areas for improvement:
  • Safety related to 3rd floor College of Design spray booth
    • Action: Spray booth Closed
  • registration into upper-level needed courses for ISA majors
    • Action: scheduling has been adjusted, will continue to refine
  • Studios, advising and promotional materials for the MFA in IVA need to be revised and improved
    • Action: A Collegiate Programs Coordinator has been hired to advance recruitment initiatives, support articulation agreements and increase visibility of all College of Design Programs.
    • Action: Additional studio space at Design on Main has been designated.
    • Action: IVA students are expected to identify and work with a major professor and to develop their committee by the end of their second semester.
  • Staffing and scheduling for College of Design Gallery
    • Action: in the process of being addressed through reallocation of internal resources
